This festival is sponsored by the Business Men's Association and all the choral groups, orchestras, and bands and soloists in the community are taking part during the afternoons and evenings. Mr. Lambrecht also does the announcing and signs off each evening at nine o'clock with "Stille Nacht." This music is reported being heard as far as Steger and East Chicago Heights and is being enthusiastically received. These programs originate in a local Chicago Heights funeral home where the Hammond organ played by Miss Lillian Collins is used for accompaniment and organ solos.

On Sunday evening, last, Mr. Lambrecht directed a choir of 36 voices in a candle light concert of Christmas music at the First Methodist church. The church was decorated with 8 large Christmas Trees and lighted with 96 tall tapers. Several Frankfort people attended this service.

Peace On Earth

"Peace on Earth" was first proclaimed nearly two thousand years ago and it is as far from being a reality as it was when first sung by the angelic choir on the plains of Judea.

When the pages of history are turned back we find bloody wars and strife all thru the centuries and when we glance at the conditions of the world today, we find nations on the brink of war, others already engulfed in the malestorm of the god of war and "Peace on Earth" sounds like a hollow mockery.

That this Message of old has not become a real, living force, is not the fault of the Announcer of the Message, but is entirely to be blamed on the common people the world over. If these people would not be like so many dumb driven cattle and allow the war gods and narrow minded nationalists and greedy money makers lead then into war and create a spirit of hate and revenge in their minds, then the centuries old message would be a living reality today.

If the common people would only wake up and see how futile, how absolutely asinine it is to wage war, to kill off thousands of innocent people, destroy millions of dollars worth of property and bring about misery and suffering followed by years of depression, and all for what? The victor really never gains in the long run, and war only sows seeds of revenge leading to more wars.

The common people the world over must awake and refuse to fight any more wars, and to tell the makers of wars, to get in the front line trenches and shoot it out among themselves, and leave the common people out of it. If the agitator and lovers of war would be compelled to do their own fighting, there would be no more wars, and "Peace on Earth" would become something with a real meaning to it.

The common people have been exploited for centuries and will continue so, until they awake to the fact they have it in their power, to really bring about "Peace on Earth" by refusing to fight in any army or navy and will find a way to settle international disputes thru legal court procedures, same as is done in civil life.

Instead of the churches sending missionaries to the heathen to preach the gospel, they should send missionaries among the common people the world over and convert them to the idea of "Peace on Earth", and thus make this Christmas message of old bring about the universal brotherhood of man and the destruction of the spirit of hate, revenge and greed.

If all the lives and money wasted in war would be used for the pursuits of peace, what a wonderful world this would be. Stop and think how great an amount of good could be accomplished. There would be no poverty, education could be made possible to every child, more and better hospitals would relieve suffering, and science would be enabled to carry on and make discoveries on a larger scale for the benefit of humanity.

It is all up to the common people, not of one nation, but of all the nations of the world, to bring about universal peace and "Peace on Earth" will be a vital, living reality.

Former Frankfort Furniture Dealer Active at 91

George A. Weimann, well known former Frankfort furniture dealer figured in an elaborate writeup in the Sunday Chicago Herald and Examiner last Sunday. A very large picture in the center of the page showed Mr. Weimann, now 91 years old, busily engaged recaning a chair in his furniture shop in Chicago Heights.

Mr. Weimann came to Frankfort in 1871 and conducted his furniture business in the building now occupied by B. Zechlin who is also engaged in the furniture and the embalming business.

Leading an active life the average man years younger would find hard to equal, Weimann can't understand all the fuss over him.

For sixty-one years he has been a builder and repairer of fine furniture. Today the hands and eyes that have served him so long still possess the expert skill his trade requires.

Weimann operates a furniture repair shop at 1612 Euclid avenue, in Chicago Heights. It is the shop he opened up in 1907 when he moved to the then small village from Frankfort.

A son of German parents who came to this country in 1844, Geo. Weimann was born December 3, 1846, in a farmhouse that stood in what now is the village of Elmhurst.

Witnessed Great Fire
As a youth he worked on his father's farm and then went to Chicago, where he found employment in a grocery store on State street. He worked in that capacity until the Chicago fire came along and wiped out the store. He was an eye-witness to that world famous disaster, and can tell thrilling accounts of the catastrophe.

Weimann went back to the farm. In 1871 he married a neighbor girl and moved to Frankfort, where he opened his first furniture repair shop. He remained in business there until 1907, when he moved to Chicago Heights.

He does all his own work, buys his own materials and manages his business. Whenever he needs small orders, Weimann walks the four blocks to the store or lumber yard.

No Time To Pose

When a reporter and photographer visited the aged workman, he was so busy he said he did not have time to pose for a picture. But the cameraman got one.

Between the skillful motions of weaving a straw seat in a chair, Weimann told his life history.

"I can't waste time," he said. "I have to have this order finished before Christmas."

About six years ago he visited Chicago for the first time in many years.

"I was amazed at the way the city had grown," he said. "When I worked there, the Illinois Central tracks skirted the lake front and the waves would dash over the rail road tracks. Now, look at the shore. The city is too noisy for me now."

He wasn't sure if he would take time out again to visit Chicago. Relatives tried hard to have him see the World's Fair but he refused.

Never Seriously Ill

His wife has been dead for many years and but one of his eight children survive. She is Mrs. Sophia Warner, with whom he makes his home. He has never been seriously ill in his life. He eats three good meals a day, gets plenty of sleep and smokes a pipe.

"I have no particular desire to reach a certain age," he said. "It seems as if when one wants to reach, say a hundred, something goes wrong."

Bogus Check Passer Quickly Caught By Police

That it does not pay to try to make easy money by issuing fake checks was learned by an Oak Forest resident last week. This party came to the Bremen State Bank in Tinley Park the forepart of the week and deposited a check for $150 and $1 in cash.

Last Thursday he called at one of the Tinley Park stores and sought to cash a $20 check, but when the merchant said he could not spare that much cash the check passer said $5 would do. After the merchant had cashed the check he became suspicious and called the Bremen State Bank and learned that the check was worthless. The check the Oak Forest man had deposited had bounced back from a Chicago bank on which it was drawn.

The merchant immediately took the matter up with the local Tinley Park Business Men's Association and was advised to get the guilty party. Police Chief C. A. Stein-

ORLAND WOMAN AGED 81, BREAKS HIP IN FALL, DIES

Mrs. Gottfried Koehler of Orland Park, aged 81 years, died at the Silver Cross hospital, Joliet Thursday morning, December 23rd. She was a long time resident of this section.

Mrs. Koehler had the misfortune to fall in her home Sunday and breaking her hip. She was removed to Silver Cross hospital. Pneumonia set in and caused her death.

Mrs. Koehler was born in Coopers Grove on November 15, 1856. On Oct. 24, 1877 she was united in marriage with Gottfried Koehler. To this union three daughters and three sons were born, the daughters preceding their mother in death.

Surviving are three sons, Gottfried of Springfield, Ill., John of Tinley Park and George of Orland Park; eight grand children and one great grand child.

WPA Starts Road Work at Mokena

The dirt road running back of the Bruder farm along the Rock Island railroad, is being improved and widened preparatory to being rock surfaced. This is a WPA project and about 200 workers are engaged on the job.

Saenger Hall Changes Hands

The Saenger Hall in Tinley Park has changed hands. The new proprietor, Edw. H. Jagla of Chicago took over the tavern business and the hall last Thursday, succeeding Norman Hansen. The new proprietor plans to conduct pinocle tournaments after the New Year. Watch for the dates.

Roller skating parties will be held in the Saenger Hall every Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday night.

hagen and two county highway police men and the merchant finally discovered where the man lived in Oak Forest and proceeded to his home later in the evening. Upon arriving they found no one at home. After repeated calls they finally found the man's wife at home at 1:30 o'clock Friday morning. They told her what had occurred and requested her to tell her husband to report to Police Chief Steinhagen at Tinley Park by 8 o'clock Friday morning. He reported at the time specified and returned the $5 in cash to the merchant.

Due to the fact that this being the Yuletide season and that the check passer had a family, the Tinley merchant did not press any charges, but the man was given a reprimand he will not soon forget.

This incident should be a good example to any others who might have the inclination to make easy money by issuing bad checks. This does not pay and the guilty ones are as a rule always caught up with.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER VI

Joyce Sewell, on the eve of her twentieth birthday, rebels at her lot, dependent on her detested stepmother, Irma, and full of tragic memories of her mother's murder twelve years before and her father's death six months ago. Irma calls in Helm Blackadder, an admirer, to help her persuade Joyce to marry rich, young Michael Kirkpatrick. Mike, sent up to Joyce by Irma and Blackadder, demands a showdown on his proposal and is rejected. Joyce realizes that La Barranca, a Mexican hacienda which her father had owned, legally belongs to her. Later, she receives a letter enclosing a warrant on the United States Treasury for $10,000 compensation for her mother's murder at La Barranca. She confers with Mr. Bradley, a banker and only remaining friend of her father's. She decides that she wants to make a secret journey to Mexico. Bradley arranges all details for her. She departs by plane undetected. Dirk Van Suttart, second secretary of the American embassy in Mexico City, gives Joyce a chilly reception and she loses her temper. She finds a Mexican woman lawyer, Margarida Fonseca, who takes her to General Onelia, right-hand man to the Mexican minister of war. Margarida reminds Onelia that the usurper of La Barranca is his dangerous enemy, General Dorado. The two make plans to send Joyce with a few picked men under Pancho Buenaventura to drive Dorado out. Adan Arnaldo, a young man who runs El Tenebroso, a night club, knows Dorado's present whereabouts, so they take Joyce there that night, where she notices Dirk. General Dorado arrives and in the course of sudden gunplay, the lights go out and Joyce is left alone. Adan Arnaldo whisks her out and takes her home. The following morning Joyce drives off to Toluca with Pancho. Back in Elsinboro, Joyce's disappearance has been discovered. Blackadder upbraids Irma, but succumbs to her helpless charm and plans to marry her.

"Did you or anybody else in your organization loan or give any funds to Joyce Sewell?"

"The answer is no, Helm," declared Mr. Bradley after a pause.

Blackadder turned from the telephone with a scowl. "Bradley knows where Joyce got the money," he announced. "He's no liar so he didn't give or loan it to her, but he knows where she got it and he won't tell."

Never since college days had Blackadder bowed to authority. But he was now momentarily confused; conscious he had just made a major capitulation. What did it matter how it had come about? Without the fuss and feathers of formal proposal or acceptance he and Irma Sewell were headed for the altar. Realization brought him no regret but also no particular exaltation.

By nine o'clock that night Blackadder was in Washington and by eleven the next morning, already having cashed a telegraphed money order, he succeeded in reaching the secretary of state.

The secretary knew nothing of Cutler Sewell or La Barranca but he had read plenty about Joyce. As a consequence he succumbed to direct action with the result that a few hours later, just as Dirk Van Suttart had finished changing into polo togs, a messenger arrived summoning him to the embassy.

"Sorry to break up your game, Dirk," was the ambassador's greeting, "but you're in charge of the gray code, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Cast your eye over that," said the ambassador, tossing him a flimsy. "I haven't seen a code message for so long I was beginning to think they're obsolete; by the same token you must be out of practice. Do your best and bring me the reading as soon as it's done."

It was almost six o'clock before Van Suttart, his face drawn either from exhaustion or anxiety, reappeared. "Here you are, sir."

"Read it," said the ambassador. Dirk cleared his throat before obeying. "Confidential Miss Joyce Sewell departmental passport number eight nine six seven two five three reported in Mexico City stop at request of her prospective stepfather Mr. Helm Blackadder of Elsinboro New York who will meet all expenses you are instructed to locate her with all possible dispatch show every attention including provision of funds and guard without annoying her pending his arrival do not employ native police under any circumstances and keep matter secret especially as regards press."

"Quite a mouthful," murmured the ambassador. "What do they think I am—a gumshoe expert?" He frowned. "By the way, isn't that the girl the radio has been talking about for the last three nights?"

"The radio!" exclaimed Dirk, startled. "I don't know, sir; I haven't a radio."

"One of those kidnaping scares," explained the ambassador.

"Excuse me, sir. May I express an opinion?"

"Certainly, if you're sure you have one."

"I believe we can prick that bubble in no time," said Dirk. "Miss Sewell was at the chancellery five days ago. I know where she's staying and the sort of people she's going about with."

"Good boy!" exclaimed the ambassador. "Dirk, you've bought something. Get out and go to work. Take a holiday. I leave the entire matter in your hands."

Dirk climbed into his sports roadster and drove to the hotel Joyce had given as her address only to find she had checked out within half an hour of leaving the chancellery. There was no information as to whence she had come or where she had gone. The face of the woman who had been with her at El Tenebroso was unforgettable, but unfortunately he had failed to establish her identity at the time. General Onelia he knew, officially as well as by sight and reputation. Getting his address from the telephone directory he drove to his residence and succeeded in penetrating to the patio where he was asked to wait. Presently he heard the roar of the general's voice.

"Say I'm not at home. I don't care if he can hear me. Say I'm out."

Dirk sat down on the near-by bench between two lounging soldiers and lighted a cigarette. When the messenger came back he looked up at him smilingly and spoke loudly in fair Spanish. "I heard, but the general is under a misapprehension. If my business were official I would of course have called on him by appointment at the war office. But it isn't. It's personal, as between one gentleman and another. I shall sit here until he sees me unless he wishes to assume the responsibility of having me thrown out."

Onelia came stumping around the angle of the patio. "Well, then, compadre, what is it—as one gentleman to another?"

"I came to elicit your sympathy. I saw you the other night at El

"Get Your Hat and Coat," Whispered Adan. "Follow Me."

Tenebroso accompanied by two ladies, one blue and the other black-eyed. Please take pity on me. Would you consider it an unpardonable indiscretion if I should inquire as to their identities?"

"Not at all," said Onelia promptly. "The black-eyed one is the well-known lawyer, Licenciada Margarida Fonseca. As for the young girl, I haven't the slightest idea who she is."

"She didn't come in with you?"

"Oh, no. As I remember it Margarida smiled at her in the lobby and the girl simply tagged along."

"Do you happen to know what became of her after the disturbance?"

"I don't. I haven't seen her from that moment to this. Are there any further questions?"

"None, General. I can't thank you too much for your frankness and courtesy."

The interview at an end Dirk could not break away quickly enough. Perhaps this thing was serious, and what lead had he left? Only one. Adan Arnaldo, and that was a thin hope. Going alone to El Tenebroso was a questionable move, but he would have to face it.

When he arrived he ignored the head waiter and took possession of a small table seldom used because it was too close to the orchestra. Dirk promptly showed the caliber of his brain by ordering a magnum of vintage champagne. A young man at El Tenebroso without a girl was an absurdity but a young man seated before a magnum of wine is never an absurdity to a maitre d'hotel and seldom to anybody else. In due course the lure worked even on Arnaldo. During an interlude he approached the table.

"Got it bad?" he asked with a friendly grin.

"The worst in years," said Dirk. "Mind if I sit down?"

"Not at all. I'll order another."

"Nonsense, man. One glass is all I want."

"Sorry," said Dirk, "this bottle is mine; I have to keep track of what I drink." He looked up and smiled.

"No offense, Arnaldo; you can have anything else you want."

Adan ordered a wine. "You're clever, you know. A vintage wine is the one thing we don't dare fake."

Dirk leaned forward. "Listen, Arnaldo, I'm not such a fool as to try any slick business with you. Some people think the president runs this country, but I know better."

"Flattery!" said Arnaldo, "and how I love it! But let's be fair to myself; I run only the town."

"All right; leave it at that. Do you remember the last night I was here—the night you had to do your stuff on some sort of a general with a gun?"

"Sure—our last incident but one. Four nights ago to be exact."

"Here's the dirt," said Dirk with a quick nod. "General Onelia was sitting at the end of this row with a woman called Margarida Fonseca and a young American girl who doesn't seem to be here tonight. I've got to find that girl and find her quick. Can you help me?"

During the speech Arnaldo's face had gone completely blank; now he frowned as if he were doing his best to remember. "A young girl, eh? Are you sure she was American?"

"Why stall?" asked Dirk sharply. "I'm playing straight with you, why not try it with me? Her name is Joyce Sewell. Do you know where she is now? Arnaldo, if I don't find her I lose my self-respect and perhaps my job."

Adan nodded as if he had come to a decision. "Stay here. Wait for me. Without her permission I'll tell you nothing."

He was gone before Dirk could protest. His heart sank to a new low for the evening as he poured out his sixth glass of wine. He looked up to see Arnaldo returning from the telephone booth at a pace that seemed slow yet moved with the speed of a stalking cat.

"Get your hat and coat," whispered Adan. "Follow me."

Riding along in the night Joyce did not think of La Barranca as a spot but as a world, and she was right. Her childhood memories would have fallen short of laying out a blueprint but they were quite capable of leading her with accuracy through such a maze as the uninitiated mind can scarcely conceive.

In her thoughts her feet hurried through one of two great gates at each end of a narrow quay which in times of peace could be an open thoroughfare. Midway between them they paused to await the opening of a zaguan, a massive portal of solid planks, flanked on either side by administrative and executive offices. Beyond it they entered the first of the great courts, a huge cobbled square surrounded by stalls, chapel, school, general store, sheds, tack room and granaries—a space capable of harboring a thousand head of livestock in addition to a fair-sized threshing floor.

Over the pine-clad mountains, winding down into the valley of the Lerma and then shooting in a bee line across the plain into the city of Toluca the road had been excellent, but from that point on it was proving unbelievably bad. The car, running without lights was pitching, rearing, weaving like a maddened broncho. She grasped the struts above her and dangled like a monkey in the zoo. Hours passed, but at last she caught a first glimpse of the white-walled cradle of her childhood and cried, full-voiced: "La Barranca! Yo la veo!"

She was so absorbed in watching the approach of the white blot of buildings that she failed to note a figure squatted beneath the candelabra of a monster cactus, but Pancho saw it and stopped.

"Direcho, Eusebio?" he asked.

"No." A peon, ghostly in cotton jumper and pants, stepped forth. "Siga-me."

Obediently the car followed him off the trail and over the smooth prairie, necessarily at a snail's pace. Presently they swerved left and continued along the edge of the barranca that had given the hacienda its name. It was an irregular cleft a hundred feet deep and with almost perpendicular walls which ran for miles. Along most of its length it was over 50 yards wide, but occasionally it narrowed to 10 and at one point to less. Here a swinging rope bridge had been thrown across and upon catching a glimpse of it Joyce barely managed to stifle a cry. This had been the outermost boundary of her childhood canters.

Eusebio pointed and stood aside. Carefully Pancho drove the car until it stalled into a gully so deep the ragged top became one with the surrounding prairie. He crawled out and so did Joyce. Noticing he had omitted to do so, automatically she turned off the ignition and took the key. He carried the lighter petaca and Eusebio the heavy suitcase. When they reached the bridge Eusebio stepped lightly across, Pancho waited until he reached the other side and then followed. Watching them, Joyce's hair began to tingle.

The steep sag of its own weight was startling enough, but under a burden the angles, changing at every step, became preposterous. Add a sway which resembled that of a trapeze in full swing. Joyce started cautiously down the incline which promptly dipped so sharply she would have been hurled headlong had she not had a firm grip on the upper ropes. After what seemed an age she was across. Then they moved forward, a silent and ghostly procession. The hovels of peons, still tightly sealed against the night air, began to appear to right and left, looking like whitewashed tombs. In one corner of a corral, commanding a full view of the eastern entrance gate, Joyce was placed along with her baggage and told not to budge until further orders. Beside her crouched Eusebio, awaiting the dawn. Pancho had disappeared, but presently he returned. He had changed from his well-fitted uniform into clothes exactly like Eusebio's—a great conical straw hat, jumper and pants of white cotton, sandals held by a thong between his big toe and the next. She failed to notice the heavy bulge around his waist under the loose jumper, a twin bulge to Eusebio's.

A pale green light appeared in the heavens and with only a moment's warning the sun rose at their backs to give battle to the setting moon. Vaguely she realized Pancho and Eusebio were gone from her side. She had sensed rather than seen them wriggle over the wall, rise to their feet and melt through the morning mist into the passing procession. She waited with held breath, wondering what was about to happen. Then pandemonium broke loose.

Half a dozen scattered shots, acting as detonator, exploded a volume of shrieks such as she had heard but once before in her life. Through the gate came a lone individual in nondescript khaki at a dead run, eyes bursting from his head in the agony of his fear. As she looked his chest opened toward her in a tragic scarlet flower. He seemed to stop in mid-air; then, though already dead, came hurtling and tumbling through the dust to thud against the adobe wall. Winged by rage she leaped over him and ran toward the gate as fast as her feet could carry her.

"Stop!" she shouted in a voice hoarse with fury. "Oh, stop! Oh, don't! Don't!"

Columbus' Claim to Discovery of America Is Disputed; Document Credits Vespucci

Definite proof that Amerigo Vespucci discovered and landed on the American continent before Christopher Columbus is stated to have been found in the private archives of a distinguished Florentine family, according to a Florence, Italy, United Press correspondent in the Chicago Daily News.

Yellowed with age, the ancient document furnished information regarding the route which the Florentine navigator followed during his third voyage to the New World. It actually consists of a hitherto unpublished letter from the navigator to Lorenzo Pierfrancesco de' Medici, in whose service he had been a clerk.

The letter also supplies information regarding Vespucci's voyages across the Atlantic.

The document was discovered by the Marquis Roberto Ridolfi, member of the council of the state archives and honorary bibliographical inspector.

The well-known Italian historian revealed that the letter also contained a statement proving that Vespucci landed on the shores of the American continent long before Columbus.

Marquis Ridolfi has added that the interesting letter will soon be made public.

Three other letters of Amerigo Vespucci, all of them addressed to Lorenzo de' Medici, were discovered during the Eighteenth and Nineteenth centuries.

According to the best information available today, Vespucci first saw the shores of South America on June 16, 1497. Columbus, it is claimed, saw the continent opposite the island of Trinidad on August 1, 1498.

The Germans and the Dutch

The terms "Pennsylvania-German" and "Pennsylvania-Dutch" are used indiscriminately. There is a difference, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. The Pennsylvania Dutch are largely of German and Swiss origin. Ancestors of Pennsylvania Germans emigrated from the region of the upper Rhine and from the valley of the Neckar in southern Germany.

Catch Up on Chic

IF YOU'RE a bit behind in the thrilling game of Sew-Your-Own, Milady, why not take advantage of the holiday season and catch up? Today's trio is especially right for "vacation sewing" because it consists of simple practical pieces that require little time and trouble. Make all three and you'll have gone a long way toward putting the old punch back in the game.

Streamlined Styling.

The slip at the left is all you could wish for from the standpoint of styling. It offers superb lines from the moderately low cut V neck, through the dart-fitted waist right down to the very hem. The clever overlapping back is light proof and provides an action pleat so necessary for complete satisfaction. Important, too, is the fact that you may choose the material you wish in your own color. Better make it in duplicate for many meticulous months ahead.

Pretty in Sheer Wool.

The two-piece in the center is, like the slip, heavy on style. The defined waist is effectively young as is the flowing skirt and little round collar. It is just the frock to give one lots of git-up-and-git for the second semester, or "to break the ice" whenever one is anxious about one's appearance. It can be the height of chic in sheer wool—very pretty in flat crepe.

Modern Home Dress.

When it's home you're thinking of you naturally turn to a frock like the third member of the trio at the right. This button-all-the-way model is different enough to delight you and simple enough to set you sewing at sight. It is cut for comfort but with an ever watchful eye on that elusive little thing called chic. Crisp contrast may be had in the collar and cuffs and in that trim row of buttons that march down the line—and then back again. Look fresh in your version in pretty percale.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1946 is designed for sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 44 bust). Size 16 requires 3 1/4 yards of 39 inch fabric. One yard of ribbon is required for shoulder straps.

Pattern 1404 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4 1/4 yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1390 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35 inch material. The collar and cuffs in contrast require 1 1/4 yards material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

Respect Due Precedent

Respect for precedent has a solid basis. Don't be contemptuous of precedent, but study its claims to authority.

It is nonsense to say that no one is interested in the troubles of others. We're not all inhuman.

Men have had but one burst of extravagance in clothing in the last 30 years. It was when they paid $8 for a silk shirt.

It is hard to conceal contempt. Something besides words gives you away.

Why is it easier to start a forest fire with the mere stub of a cigarette than to set a furnace going with two pounds of kindling wood? Or Lacks So in Curiosity?

A phone won't bother you if you calmly go on writing and let it ring; but who has a seraphic temper like that?

There is always a welcome place in the world for the young woman who is determined to be a lady.

Human conscience began to function thousands of years ago. There is a lot of it in the Bible.

Gossip thrives less among men particularly because it means a black eye if not worse.

We Misjudge

Believe me, every man has his secret sorrows, which the world knows not; and oftentimes we call a man cold when he is only sad.—Longfellow.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Salt and Pepper Shaker.—A large shaker containing six parts salt to one part pepper and kept on the stove will save steps when seasoning cooking foods.

Sliding Dresser Drawers.—Rubbing a candle stub or wax along the sliding edges of dresser drawers will make them move in and out much more easily, even when heavily loaded.

Split Pea Soup.—Six quarts water, one and one-half pounds beef shank, one pound pig knuckle, one pound split peas, two onions, sliced. Crack the bones and cover with cold water. Add the peas and bring slowly to a boil. Boil steadily for about four hours, removing the scum as it rises. As the soup begins to thicken, cook slowly in order not to scorch. Add the onions about one hour before the soup is done.

Aisle of Woman's Dreams

Suppose you knew that one aisle of one floor in one store had everything you needed to purchase!

Suppose that on that aisle you could buy household necessities, smart clothing, thrilling gifts for bride, graduate, voyager! How much walking that would save! How much time, trouble and fretful shopping you would be spared!

That, in effect, is what advertisements in this paper can do for you. They bring all the needs of your daily life into review . . . in one convenient place. Shop from your easy-chair, with the advertisements. Keep abreast of bargains, instead of chasing them. Spend time in your newspaper to save time—and money—in the stores.

Little Billy, aged four, was being shown the shape of the earth on a globe atlas by his mother. After pointing to all the countries with their peculiar shapes, she asked:

Each one a picture in itself. The

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Is the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, December 19.The Golden Text was, "Thou, O Lord, shalt endure for ever; and thy remembrance unto all generations.
Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands" (Psalms 102: 12, 25).Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the Lord's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is" (Deut.
10: 14).The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science Textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"God creates and governs the universe, including man. The universe is filled with spiritual ideas, which He evolves, and they are obedient to the Mind that makes them" (p. 205).Christmas Programs

Albino Dingo Not Popular

The albino dingo (wild dog) of Australia is not popular among his own kind. This was proved some years ago when the first pure white dingo ever seen in Queensland was captured alive. The animal was placed in a cage with other dingoes that were in captivity. On the following morning the albino animal was found dead, having been torn to pieces.

Human Nature Interested

Human nature is always interested in itself, and each individual looks with curiosity on the progress of others in the journey of life.

Fleeing Rat Carries Young

The russet-brown rat of the islands on the north Australian coast has a novel way of carrying its young. You will see a mother rat scurrying along with one or more half-grown babies clinging teeth-and-claw to the fur of its haunches. The added weight does not appear to cause much inconvenience, as the mother can make good time over the ground when hard pressed.

Pepys Painted True Picture

Pepys, the famous English diarist, was a twaddling old gossip, but he sets down the circumstances of the events as they transpire with such clear and accurate detail, utters no feelings but in a word or two introduces us to a scenery of both the out-of-doors and in-doors life of the time.

Christmas—1937

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Again, throughout our own and many other lands, men pause to remember the first Christmas night that brought to a troubled world not a new panacea, but a New Spirit.

It was the Spirit of Peace: borne on a celestial song which not time, nor greed, nor human ambitions have ever quite muted. With each recurrent Christmas it echoes in the hearts of men, as centuries ago it echoed over the star-lit hills of Galilee.

It is a welcome, a necessary, refrain. It comes with a message to all.

To the humble and the obscure—first to hear it on that solemn midnight—it tells again that peace and strength and comfort come from sources infinitely deeper, infinitely wiser than any earthly leadership.

To the powerful and ambitious that seek new empire, it tells again that the King of Kings came not in military glory, but as a Prince of Peace, who continued to conquer long after the strongest legions were dust.

To all who strive for grandeur and the pride of great possessions, it tells again that a humble stable, with its cot of scented hay, looms larger in the mind of the world today than the richest palaces of Imperial Rome.

That is because the New Spirit which came with a Song in the air and a Star in the sky is the spirit of love and compassion. While it rules, hatreds and warring rivalries between man and man, between class and class, between nation and nation, are forgotten. When it falls, those hatreds flare anew.

Christmas, then, returns as a call to all men to keep that Spirit alive. Through successive generations, humanity has sought to hold the Song and follow the Star—often failing. Through our own generation and those to come, Christmas reminds us, the quest must continue until "the reign of violence is over."

And then the ancient message, "Peace on Earth, Good-will to Men," shall have become a reality as well as imperishable.

To The Editors

December, 1936, was the bloodiest month in the Illinois history of motor vehicle accidents. There were 314 persons killed in the 31 days. On Christmas and the day before with 48 hours alone, 57 persons were killed.

From the statistics compiled from the December reports many of the accidents were the result of drivers' wanton recklessness, inflicting untold suffering upon many innocent victims.

In an unbiased appeal to all motorists imploring them to consider the rights of others, both motorists and pedestrian as well, and to avoid the repetition of the 1936 record, the Article entitled "The Irony of It" was published in the December Safety Bulletin.

We believe an open presentation in the press of the essential facts in the article should save many lives. Any space you can devote to such a release will be appreciated.

Sub Soil Moisture Lowest In Years

It is doubted if any now living recall a fall following a drouth summer in which so little rainfall has occurred up to the formation of the winter frost crust. Very little of the precipitation either in the form of snow or rain penetrates the frost crust so as to add to the water reservoir supply of the sub soil. Anyone that has had occasion recently to dig into the sub soil has been impressed with its extreme dryness for this time of the year, and particularly under such low temperatures when the capillary moisture film around the soil particle is thick, er than under warmer temperatures.

We have had in the last eight years six drouth years in this region. In 1932 we had rather heavy rainfall and while in 1933 we experienced frequency of rainfall during the summer growing season, yet not a sufficient amount to replenish sub soil moisture to normal. We have therefore, over a period of years beginning in 1930, with the exception of 1932, been steadily accumulating a sub soil deficiency of moisture. Few of us appreciate the great reservoir capacity of sub soil for water and where zones of sub soil within the reach of plant roots, even alfalfa roots, experience exhaustion of water, moisture from greater depth moves toward it; consequently these lower zones of soil do not even under the recent dry years we have experienced become entirely void of water. Were it not for such movement of sub soil water practically all our alfalfa fields would have passed out.

Alfalfa acreage particularly has reflected declining sub soil moisture supply. We can appreciate this the more quickly when we understand that the alfalfa in its normal growth removes and transpires annually more water from the soil than the annual rainfall and one of the chief factors in the dwindling of yield over its second and third year is sub soil moisture exhaustion. With the steady lowering, then, of sub soil moisture over the last eight years in the root zone sub soil and the lowering, too, of the moisture in deeper zones that might permit recuperative moisture moving into near sub soil as its average moisture is removed by plants, and the fact that our winter frost crust has already set in we now have a sub soil moisture situation that threatens to affect our crop program for the coming year, no only with reference to alfalfa seedlings but with such crops as corn that require large amounts of water during their translocative or maturing periods and depend to such an extent on sub soil moisture for this supply.

Some may seek to minimize this situation by pointing to the relatively small actual deficiencies of precipitation, as for instance, in 1937, to date of a little over five inches, but a point to bear in mind, however, is that these figures include precipitation on top of frost crust and high rate of precipitation, in summer thunder showers, the water of both of which is largely lost in runoff as distinguished from that fraction which settles into the sub soil.

The question that comes to ones mind is what are we going to do about it. The first step is watch closely the precipitation from now on. Better measure it and have a closer estimate of the amount of water that your sub soils receive before the planting season. A simple form of rain gauge is made with a tomato can or other round receptacle which remains in an upright position in an exposed place where it will receive without interference the precipitation. It should be out in the open. A glass graduate cylinder can be obtained from dealers in drug supplies and this should be graduated to show cubic inches unless the party using it can translate centimeters into inches, when one showing cubic centimeters can be used. We first find the volume in our graduate cylinder of one inch in our collecting can and then as precipitation is collected its total volume is measured by pouring into the glass graduate daily and the equivalent in inches or fraction thereof in the can calculated. A record is then made regarding the daily precipitation as gathered in the collecting can and measured in the graduate cylinder. A record should also be made of the existence or non-existence of frost crust and indicating whether or not the precipitation resended into the sub soil or ran off. When planting season arrives we will then know the amount of precipitation occurring in the absence of frost crust as well as that occurring during frost crust.

Many of us are planning to put in the tegume seedlings in the spring and particularly some alfalfa but alfalfa at its present high cost of seed should not be seeded until we know that we have enough water in the sub soil to bring it through the summer period. Therefore, if sub soils remain dry and are not sufficiently restored by corn planting time we should, if we can, get a hybrid seed corn that has deep rooting water vascular fibers which make the best attempt to procure moisture from the sub soil during the summer crucial period of corn growth. Many of us can remember the Thomson Hybrid Seed Fields with the corn leaves green throughout the drouth period of last summer even on the hilltops showing its deep rooting water vascular root system and which is so typical and outstanding in the particular hybrid that was grown there. It is also this deep water root system that keeps this superior hybrid erect during and after maturity. Another point to keep in mind is to restrict hill count or number of kernels in a hill if subsoils remain dry up to planting time.

"The greatest economic loss that America has ever sustained has been the loss of energy and profit in farming with an inadequate supply of phosphorus."

WHILE DR. HOPKINS MADE THIS STATEMENT IN 1908, every word of it is as true today as thirty years ago. With the same land and labor cost, the return and profit in farming would be much greater if our soils were balanced with phosphorus. The aim of every farmer should be to do this as quickly and sensibly as economic conditions permit. The quickest and most return per dollar of cost is with Four Leaf Powdered Rock Phosphate. It is the only phosphate made particularly for direct soil application.

Sharing Christmas

by Jocile Webb Pearson

I AM a happy little tree. I stand beside the front entrance of a white cottage on a quiet street. Each Christmas time I bloom out in beautiful colored lights, and all who pass share my beauty and catch something of the joy of Christmas.

But I was not always happy like this. Once I lived in a great forest, surrounded by trees so tall I could only catch a glimpse of the blue sky above me, and I felt very small and lonely. I, too, wanted to be tall; to look out on the big world like the others and feel the sun shining through my branches. I would stretch out my limbs as far as I could, and send my roots deeper into the earth, but my progress was so slow I grew discouraged.

One day I saw a man and a boy coming through the forest. The man carried something over his shoulder and they seemed to be looking for something. Then the boy saw me and cried: "Look, father, there is just the tree we want." He ran over to me and fairly hugged me in his eagerness. The man looked me over. "Fine," he said. But when he began digging with the thing he had carried on his shoulder I began to tremble. I felt my roots snap one by one and soon I lay a tumbled heap on the ground. Life seemed over for me.

Next I was tied to a funny looking thing on wheels, that spluttered and growled when the man and boy climbed in and we started off down a twisty little road that wound through the forest, then out on a big shining highway until we came to a wide driveway that led through a sloping lawn to a white cottage.

Here I was untied and put into a large earthen jar filled with sand and carried into the house, and set in a corner of a big room beside a sunny window. Oh, the joy of having the sun on my branches. I began to feel less scared and to look about me.

In a big mirror opposite I could watch the man as he fastened me upright. Then he put a string of lights from my top to my toe, whistling softly as he worked. Then I heard a door open and a rush of feet—a little boy and a girl dashed into the room crying: "Mamma, come quick, and see our Christmas tree." They clapped their hands and danced about me. Soon the mother came with a box filled with shining lovely things and my plain green dress was covered with sparkling jewels. I hardly dared look in the mirror for I remembered I was only a humble tree after all, and what I saw could not be me at all; but the great silver star on my topmost branch made me feel very happy. I seemed to draw courage from just looking at it.

After a time I was left to myself. I was glad, as I needed to rest up a bit and get used to my strange surroundings. It grew dark outside and snow was falling; but inside my star shone and a quiet peace came over me.

Then once more the doors opened and a merry group of people came in. This time there were Father and Grandfather and Grandmother, too; and Mother leading the little boy and girl. Everyone was saying how lovely I was; but I did not want them to look at me. I wanted them to see two little faces outside pressed against the window pane. The boy saw them first. "Look, Daddy, Mamma!" he shouted and pointed to the window. "There are two children out there. Bring them in, Daddy; give them some of our Christmas." And the little girl clapped her hands and cried: "Oh, do, Daddy, it's cold out there!"

When they were brought in looking rather scared, but glad, I was so happy I almost shook my bangles off. Then Mother made music on a big box with shining keys and everyone sang Christmas carols. Then Father told the old story of the Shepherds and the Star that led to the Christ Child. Then a jolly man with a red coat and a pack on his back gave everyone presents, including the little strangers. There were candies and nuts, plenty for all, and such a babble of happy voices. I felt the thrill of it myself and the big star glowed in sympathy.

Reddy and Sammy

by Thornton W. Burgess

SAMMY JAY PUTS ON HIS THINKING CAP

SAMMY JAY had a great deal to think about and so he went off by himself to a certain thick hemlock tree in the Green Forest where he could be quite alone. Now, whenever Sammy Jay goes by himself that way to put on his thinking cap you may make up your mind that mischief of some kind is brewing in that small head of his. Just now Sammy was thinking about what he had overheard Buster Bear say to Jumper the Hare, and he was wondering how he could get something out of it for himself. You know, Sammy is one of those people who try to profit by the troubles of other people. He is never so happy py as when he can find some one in trouble, because he is almost sure to find some way to get something for himself out of it.

One time Sammy happened along when Chatterer the Red Squirrel and Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel were quarreling about some very fat choice acorns. Each claimed them as his. Sammy just urged them to fight for them, and this is what they did. While they were fighting Sammy carried away all the acorns, and when finally they agreed to stop fighting and divide the acorns they found none to divide. Sammy had hidden every one where only he could find them. That was dishonest, very dishonest, but, you know, Sammy has always been a thief. He thought it was smart. You and I know better, but he didn't, and there are a lot of people in this world just like him.

Now, Sammy knew very well that Buster Bear was the strongest and biggest of all the people who lived in the Green Forest, and when he had first seen Buster Sammy had been very much afraid of him. Now he wasn't afraid, because he knew that his wings would keep him out of reach of Buster's cruel claws, but he had a great deal of respect for Buster just the same and he wanted to do something that would make Buster his friend. When he overheard Buster ask Jumper the Hare to try to find out for him where he could get some honey Sammy smiled. He knew that the only way Jumper could find out was by asking questions of those who lived in trees, for it is in hollow trees that Busy Bee stores up honey. To be sure, Busy's big cousin, Bumble, who makes such a fuss about everything he does, has a little storehouse in the ground, and possibly Jumper might find this. But if he did it wouldn't be a taste for Buster. What he wanted was the storehouse of Busy Bee.

"Now if I can find it for him," thought Sammy, "he'll always be my friend. I think I'll have a look at all the hollow trees I know of in the Green Forest."

Just then another thought popped into Sammy's head. He and Reddy Fox were not the best of friends. In some ways they were very much alike, and perhaps this was the reason that they were forever falling out. Sammy had been one of the first and loudest to jeer at and make fun of Reddy the time he seemed to be running away from Jumper the Hare. Then he had seen Reddy run from Buster Bear only that very morning, when Buster had suddenly appeared just as Reddy had thought to catch Jumper the Hare, and he knew that Reddy knew that he had seen and laughed at him. So now Reddy was sure to be his enemy.

"If I can think of some plan which will make Reddy think he can make friends with Buster Bear, why Reddy will forget all about his anger with me," thought Sammy. "I have it! I'll tell him how Buster wants some honey and set him to hunting for the storehouse of Busy Bee."

With that off flew Sammy Jay to hunt for Reddy Fox and tell him how he could make friends with Buster Bear.

ALL CITRUS FRUITS YIELD VITAMINS

Here You Have C in Large Content, Also A, B, G.

By EDITH M. BARBER

MOST of us resent being told that we must eat certain foods because "they are good for us." When, however, we find this phrase used to describe fruits which we like as much as oranges and grapefruit, we feel differently about the question.

Even before the discovery that vitamins existed, the consumption of these fruits had been steadily rising for years with the improved quality of packing and transportation facilities. Oranges which have been known as edible fruits for centuries received an earlier distribution than the grapefruit. Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago is credited with having introduced this fruit from Florida into northern markets. At this time, somewhere around forty years ago, it was fashionable to pretend to like the small, bitter fruit which were luxuries. It was necessary to sugar it hours before eating and was, of course, quite different from the heavy, sweet fruit of today.

We now find grapefruit on the market throughout most of the year, although it is at its best in the late fall and winter. Recently I enjoyed some of the first pink Texas grapefruit which were sent to me directly from that state. The season for oranges never ends.

While citrus fruits are particularly valued for their large vitamin C content, they supply as well liberal amounts of vitamins A, B and G, as well as some calcium and phosphorus besides the natural sugar.

The citrus fruit habit should be cultivated.

Broiled Grapefruit.

Cut grapefruit in half crosswise, remove center core and loosen sections. Place in a pan and sprinkle each half with two tablespoons of brown sugar and dot with half a tablespoon of butter. Broil fifteen minutes under a very low flame.

Orange Marmalade.

1 orange
1 grapefruit
1 lemon

Cut the fruit into fine strips, removing the seeds. Measure, add three times the amount in water and allow to stand for twenty-four hours. Boil until the skins are tender. Measure, add an equal amount of sugar and boil until it responds to jelly test (two drops will hang side by side from spoon which has been dipped in boiling mixture). Pour into jars and seal.

Orange and Pineapple Jam.

4 cups citrus and pineapple mixture
7 cups sugar
½ cup bottled fruit pectin

Add grated rinds and juice of two oranges and two lemons to crushed pineapple. Measure fruit mixture into large kettle. Add sugar, mix and bring to a full rolling boil, stirring constantly. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Stir for just five minutes to cool slightly. Pour quickly. Cover hot jam with a film of hot paraffin; when jam is cold, cover with one-eighth inch of hot paraffin. Roll glass to spread paraffin on sides.

SOME FAVORITES

Deluxe Marmalade.

2 cups cubed pineapple, fresh or canned
5 cups quartered peaches
6 cups sugar
1½ cups sliced Brazil nuts
1 four-ounce jar maraschino cherries and juice.

Mix pineapple and peaches with sugar and let stand fifteen minutes. Crack a peach stone and add to fruit mixture. Heat the fruit and sugar slowly to the boiling point and cook gently until thick and clear. Add Brazil nuts and cherries which have been cut in quarters and cherry juice. Cook one minute, pour into clean, hot jars and seal.

Sweet Potatoes With Pineapple.
5 or 6 sweet potatoes
1 cup crushed pineapple and juice
¼ cup butter
Salt, pepper

Boil sweet potatoes until tender. Pare and mash well. Add pineapple and butter and beat until fluffy. Season to taste and serve at once.

Cranberry Pudding.
1½ cups pastry flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup sugar
2 cups cranberries
1 egg
½ cup milk
3 tablespoons butter

Sift together the flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Then add the cranberries which have been washed. Beat the egg and add to the milk, then add this slowly to the dry ingredients. Add the melted butter and mix well. Pour into individual molds, which have been buttered, and place in the oven in a pan with about 1½ inches of boiling water. Cover and let steam at 400 degrees Fahrenheit for one hour.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

By Roger B. Whitman

HOT WATER HEAT

IN A hot water heating system there is a circulation of hot water through radiators in the different rooms. Water is heated in the cellar in a boiler that is the same as the boiler of a steam heating system.

When heated, water becomes lighter in weight, and will float on colder water. In a heating system, heated water can rise through pipes attached to the top of a boiler, and flow upward to the radiators. Cold water that is ahead of it in the radiators and piping, will sink because of its greater weight, and return to the bottom of the boiler. The heating of water in the boiler thus starts a circulation throughout the entire system, the heated water rising to the radiators and, when cooled, returning to the boiler to be again heated.

When a hot water system is properly designed and installed, all radiators begin to heat at the same time, so that heating is uniform throughout the house. There is a tendency for the upward flow of hot water to be much stronger in long vertical pipes than in short ones, and for this reason, unless something is done about it, top floor radiators will heat more quickly than radiators on lower floors that are nearer to the boiler. To make the flow equal to all radiators, the pipes to the higher radiators must be choked, so that there will be greater resistance. Sometimes this is done by using smaller pipes. Another method is to use washers at the valves of the high radiators; washers with holes in them like doughnuts, the holes being of the right sizes to cut down the flow.

A common complaint with hot water heat is the quicker heating of the high radiators, the reason being that the greater flow has not been checked. The remedy is to apply a washer with a hole of the right size to the radiators that heat most quickly.

A hot water heating system can be greatly improved by the use of a pump in the return pipe to the boiler, driven by a small electric motor. This pump drives water through the boiler and to the radiators with much more force than it has with heating alone. Distant radiators then heat quickly, and the entire system shows a great improvement. A pump of this type can be attached to any heating system.

With a pump, pipes leading to the radiators can be small, which reduces the cost of installation. In modern systems, copper tubing of only one-half inch diameter gives excellent results.

WHEN a shower catches you unaware, it's instinct to run for the nearest canopy. But a girl can't stand under a canopy all day. Especially if she has an important engagement or a pair of shoes to buy. Standing under canopies doesn't get her anywhere.

We've discovered that men with very large umbrellas are a very excellent substitute for canopies. And they usually move. You can sneak up behind them, and duck your hat under the back edge of the umbrella. The hat, after all, is what counts. Then you tiptoe along behind until you reach the corner of Main and Broad, and there you are. If your moving shelter decides to turn the wrong corner, just tap him on the arm and say, "Pardon me, but do you mind dropping me off at the drug store?" He'll probably be pleased to oblige.

In fact, if you aren't too silent as you sneak along behind him, he may take notice of you and give you a real woman's share of his umbrella. Some men are still very polite in a rainstorm.

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Lesson for December 26

CHRISTIAN CONSECRATION

LESSON TEXT—Philippians 1:12-26.
GOLDEN TEXT—For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.—Philippians 1:21.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Our Best Friend.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Answering Jesus.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Choosing a Life Purpose.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Christian Surrender Means.

Consecration is one of the words expressing Christian truth which has been so much used and so often misused that it has lost its savor. The writer remembers many a "consecration service" which meant nothing to those present except the fulfilling of a certain formula or program. The purpose of the meeting was excellent, but results were lacking because it had become a mere formality.

Paul the apostle knew nothing of any theory of consecration. He knew and lived and proclaimed such an abandonment of self to Christ and his cause as really required no statement in words—it was his life.

We close today a three-month series of studies in the Christian life. We began at the right point by considering "Christian Sonship," for no one can live until he is born and no one can live a Christian life until he is born again. We have considered together God's grace in keeping, renewing, guiding, blessing, and communing with his own. All these precious truths call us to devote ourselves to Christ in glad and full consecration.

Men give themselves thus to the building of a fortune, to the propagation of a political or social theory, to the pursuit of an occupation or profession. Why should not the Christian give himself in like measure for Christ and his holy cause?

Paul, in the verses of our lesson, shows that spirit and boldly declares that he follows Christ regardless of trying circumstance—he does so now, "in the body," not later in glory. And it matters not whether it be by life or death—"Christ shall be magnified."

I. "What Then?" (v. 13). Paul was imprisoned for the gospel's sake. Did that stop him? No; he made the very guards who were assigned to watch him in his house into missionaries of the cross. He won each one as he took his designated period of service and sent him out as a testimony to "the whole praetorian guard and to all the rest" (v. 13 R. V.).

Then, some of his Christian associates taking advantage of the fact that he was imprisoned, went out to preach just to show that they were as good as he. They made their very preaching an expression of their envy of his popularity and hoped to heap more sorrow upon him. Did he get angry and bitterly fight back? No; he thanked God that Christ was preached. We need more of that spirit in our day.

II. "In My Body."

One of the glaring fallacies of human thinking is the idea that at some favorable time in the future we shall be able to enjoy life, do mighty deeds or serve the Lord. For example parents fail to enjoy their children because they are always looking forward to the next stage of their development. The time to enjoy and help our children is now. The time to serve the Lord Jesus is now. The day will come when we shall be glorified with him, but it will then be too late to speak to our neighbors about Christ.

III. "To Live Is Christ and to Die Is Gain" (v. 21).

Humanly speaking when a matter is one of "life or death" it is a question whether death may not intervene. The hope is that this may not be the case and every effort is made to prevent it. How different with Paul. He rightly points out that to a Christian death means entering into perfect fellowship with Christ and unlimited service for him. Every human limitation will then be put aside—knowledge, service, communion, will all be perfect and complete.

He would not, however, turn away from his present privilege and duty. Since it is God's will that he should abide in the flesh he will do it in such a way as to make it literally true that to him "to live is Christ." Every life has a purpose and that ruling passion which controls and directs a life is what should be written into the sentence, "To me to live is..." What is it—money, position, pleasure, sin? Or is it Christ? If he is your life, then you enter into the New Year with the assurance that it will be full and satisfying, and gloriously useful.

Spiteful Words
A spiteful word cuts both ways. A slander hurts the man or woman who spreads it in a more deadly, though unseen, way than it hurts its intended victim. Victor Hugo nobly says, "Every sword has two edges; and the man who wounds with one, wounds himself with the other."

Only One Real Failure
There is only one real failure possible; and that is, not to be true to the best one knows.—Canon Farrar.

"WITH Christmas drawing near, why can't we get together and make plans?" Robert Dutton read no further. With calm deliberation, he put the heavily scrawled letter back into its envelope.

"Always the impractical Hal," he said slowly. "No wonder he never gets anywhere."

A list of appointments waited upon his desk. Visits from two of the most important men in town; a delegation about a right-of-way through a tract of land he had just purchased; a reminder of a talk he had promised to make at a luncheon. Important things, he thought, things Hal would never be called upon to do.

Hastily he went through his mail. A square envelope in a familiar hand caught his eye. He opened it a little curiously. What could Miss Denby be writing him about? His long fingers drew out an artistic Christmas card. A conservative wish and an old Christmas carol printed in English letters. That was all, except the signature, "Eleanor Denby."

A flush stained his face, an undefinable something sent the blood singing through his veins. "Eleanor," he said softly; "a beautiful name; how queer that I never heard it before."

Then, as if resenting his weakness and sentiment, he dug into his mail again. But try as he would, he could not concentrate on the things that had meant anything to him before. Something had happened to Robert Dutton; a Christmas greeting from a secretary whom he had scarcely noticed left him visibly unsettled.

Christmas memories surged through his heart. He was back in the old home again. Everybody was rushing around in circles. He saw the big tree in the corner of the parlor; the kitchen table piled high with good things to eat. And Mother and Dad, with happiness beaming upon their faces.

He picked up Hal's letter again. After all, maybe his kid brother wasn't so crazy? The thought was pushing through his mind that maybe it was he who lacked real sense. This time he read the letter in a different mood. "Let's give Dad and Mother the surprise of their lives. Let's go down and make one grand Christmas for them. You can turn everything over to someone else for a week—anyone can handle things like that—there's nothing personal or precious about them."

"We're Going to Forget Business for Today," He Said.

"Nothing personal or precious about them!" He turned the words over in his mind. Hal was right. Someone else could handle the things that had seemed so terribly important. A few hours of confusion, perhaps; then things would go on as before. The world would forget him in a day.

His fingers reached for the pen upon his desk. "Dear Hal," he began, "I heartily agree with your proposal that we get together and make plans to give Dad and Mother the biggest surprise and the grandest Christmas ever—" He was smiling broadly, almost laughing aloud, as he finished the letter with a flourish.

Five minutes later Miss Denby entered his private office to find a new Robert Dutton. She almost dropped her book in surprise at the expression upon his face, and the new way in which he greeted her.

"I'm ready to begin, Mr. Dutton," she began nervously, when he made no motion to start the routine of the day.

"We're going to forget business for today, Miss Denby, and go Christmas shopping, that is, if you want to help me out." He fumbled with his tie as he spoke, noticing for the first time the soft curving of her white neck. "Your Christmas card," he went on, "wrought some miracle. I've found out that business and making money aren't everything in life. They're both fine in their way, but there are other things, too; precious things that I've been overlooking." He came closer to her side and looked hard into her eyes. "For instance, going shopping with a good-looking and adorable secretary."

One Born Every Minute

JUST as most Americans believe that it was Abraham Lincoln who first said, "You can fool all the people some of the time and some of the people all the time; but you can't fool all the people all the time," so are 90 per cent of them convinced that P. T. Barnum originated the saying that "there's a sucker born every minute." The great showman built a fortune on the essential truth of that statement but he didn't originate it.

The man who did was another famous circus proprietor—Adam Forepaugh, one of the founders of the old Sells-Forrepaugh circus. That saying dates back to the days when there was the bitterest rivalry among a number of competitors in the circus field for John Public's dollar.

Destruction of each other's "sheets," (posters), hiring rowdies to try to break up performances, pitched battles between circus crews and frequently bloodshed marked that rivalry. Added to such "direct action" methods was the custom of spreading false reports about a competitor. So Forepaugh thought he could injure Barnum by circulating the report that Phineas had once sneeringly declared, "There's a sucker born every minute." Such propaganda, however, proved to be a boomerang.

The public, instead of resenting this insinuation against its intelligence, chuckled appreciatively over the alleged remark of "Old P. T." and declared that he "had it sized up just about right." Thereby the public proved the truth of another saying attributed (also wrongly) to Barnum. It was that "the American people like to be humbugged."

American Dictator

TALK of the possibility of America's having a dictator, such as is heard from time to time these days, is nothing new. One hundred and sixty years ago there was being circulated in this country a report that congress had conferred upon George Washington the powers of a military dictator and that American liberties were in greater danger than they had been when the country was ruled by George III.

So alarming did the rumors become that John Adams issued a statement which said: "This is as false as the other stories. Congress, it is true, upon removing to Baltimore, gave the general power to raise 15 battalions in addition to those which were ordered to be raised before, and to appoint the officers, and also 3,000 horse (cavalry) and to appoint their officers, and also to take necessities for his army, at an appraised value. But no more. Congress never thought of making him dictator or of giving him sovereignty. I wish I could find a correspondent who was idle enough to attend to every report and write it to me."

It is doubtful if any correspondent, no matter how idle, could have attended to every such report. There were too many of them—all of them set loose by British propagandists to weaken the Patriot cause by shaking the confidence of the people in their leaders. And of them all this one about a dictatorship was the most dangerous for it added greatly to the difficulties Washington was having in that crucial year of the Revolution.

The Nantucket Sea Serpent

JUST as regularly as the bathing season comes 'round each year, just as certainly will there appear newspaper reports that some bather has been startled by the sudden appearance of a "sea serpent," one of those fabulous monsters which human imagination has conjured up out of the deep for centuries.

Back in 1931 such a monster was reported seen in Lake Erie and the "Sandusky Sea Serpent" was front-page news for several days. Then it was revealed that it existed only in the minds of two carnival men who wanted to attract crowds to a popular Ohio summer resort.

Last summer bathers in the Atlantic on the coast of Massachusetts really saw one and the "Nantucket Sea Serpent" became even more famous than its Ohio relative. For it was "genuine" to this extent: it was an inflated rubber monster, designed by a famous artist who is the creator of other such figures used by a New York department store in its annual Thanksgiving day parade in that city.

The appearance of the sea serpent was exposed as a publicity stunt by J. J. R. Indio, reporter for the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Times, after which several of those who were "in on the stunt" wrote an open letter to the Nantucket Inquirer and Mirror telling how it was planned to publicize Nantucket island first and the department store incidentally. Nantucket was selected as the hoax spot because the artist has a summer home there and the founder of the store was born on the island in 1822.

HOW TO SEW
by Ruth Wyeth Spears

THIS dressing table has a curved front and hinged arms on which to mount the skirt so that it can be opened to permit access to the drawer. To mount the skirt it must first be sewed to a band of covered buckram. Cut the buckram in a strip 2½ inches wide. Cover it with a straight piece of material as shown here at B.

Make the heading at the top of the skirt just the depth of the thickness of the table edge so that it will cover the edge of the table when the arms are closed. Use ¼-inch cable cord for the shirring. This is sewed to a safety pin and run through tucks stitched in the material as shown here at C.

The top of the ruffle is also shirred with cords. When the shirring is all finished, sew the top of the skirt to the covered buckram strip as shown at D and then thumb tack it in place as at A.

Home Heating
Hints
By John Barclay
Heating Expert

WHILE a poker frequently is a handy implement to use on a furnace, let me caution you against using it for the purpose of agitating the fire-bed from above! That results in a lot of trouble for you and for your furnace.

Stirring the fire through the furnace door opening only mixes ashes with the live coals, creating clinkers. As you know, clinkers choke a fire and prevent the coal from burning freely and completely. Also, they clog the grates, making it difficult to shake the fire properly.

Owing to the odd size and shape of lumps of coal at the point that is poked from above, the fuel-bed becomes packed, and this packing prevents the free passage of air, thus forming clinkers. Clinkers formed this way, however, cause less trouble, for ordinarily they can be broken up and dropped into the ashpit by gently shaking the grates.

A Good Creed

I believe in the stuff I am handing out, in the firm I am working for and in my ability to get results.

I believe that honest stuff can be passed out to honest men by honest methods.

I believe that man gets what he goes after; that one good deed done today is worth two tomorrow, and that no man is down and out until he has lost faith in himself.

I believe in working, not weeping; in boosting, not knocking; and in the pleasure of my job.

I believe in today and the work
I am doing; in tomorrow and the work I hope to do, and in the sure reward which the future holds.

I believe in courtesy, in kindness, in generosity, in good cheer, in friendship, and in honest competition.

I believe there is something doing somewhere, for every man ready to do it.

I believe I am ready—right now.
—Elbert Hubbard.
